SEMESTER

Spring 2017 - Fall 2017

Athens and Sparta

“For my part, I understand not the many words used by the Athenians”

*Sthenelaidas, Spartan Ephor, 432 BCE
Thucydides, Book 1.86*

Athens and Sparta, the two greatest Greek city-states, clashed bitterly, have been perceived since Antiquity as opposites, yet both have forged the core values of Western civilization.

Athens, the birthplace of democracy, was a creative wonderland for arts, humanities and sciences. Sparta, by comparison, worshipped discipline and military values, favoring actions over words.

The program will deliver a full semester load comprising four courses, covering subjects such as Athenian and Spartan history and political institutions, war and religion, art and archaeology.

Classes will take place in Athens, with extended periods of time spent in Sparta. Students will receive extensive on-site teaching at a wide range of sites, monuments and museums in Attica and Laconia.

Emphasis will be given to the study of primary literary and archaeological sources (including inscriptions).

SUMMER 2016

May 21 - June 4

Jews and Early Christians in the Greco-Roman World

The cases of Athens, Corinth, and the Island of Delos

The course will examine the presence and history of the Jewish Diaspora and early Christianity in Roman Greece on the basis of literary sources, archaeological remains and ancient inscriptions.

Classes will take place in three locations that played a central role to both communities:

- Athens, the cosmopolitan city where diversity flourished.
- Corinth, where the ancient Synagogue survives and a very significant early Church was established.
- The island of Delos, a major Pagan center where archaeological evidence of the oldest Diaspora Synagogue is preserved.

Emphasis will be given on the maintenance of Jewish beliefs and ethics in the Greco-Roman Pagan World and the early creation and development of Christianity by Paul.

Readings will include Jewish, Christian and Pagan authors.

SUMMER 2016

July 17 - July 31

Ancient Thouria Excavation

Participation in the excavation of the Ancient city of Thouria near Kalamata in Messenia (Peloponnese, Greece)

Thouria, the Homeric city of Antheia, was the most important “perioikos polis” of western Messenia during Spartan domination.

Mentioned by both Thucydides and Pausanias, Thouria gained independence from Sparta in 369 B.C.E. but was handed back to the Spartans by Augustus in later times.

The excavations at the Classical-Hellenistic site began in 2007 and so far have brought to light significant remains of public and sacred buildings (www.ancientthouriaexcavation.gr).

Students will work at the excavation and learn about archaeological method, practice and drawing, excavation techniques and pottery cleaning.

Classes will include the reading of selected literary texts and inscriptions on the history of Messenia.

Scheduled fieldtrips will take students to sites of great archaeological and historical importance such as Ancient Sparta, Ancient Messene, Ancient Olympia and the Messenian Archaeological Museum.
