

Interested in
European, Russian, and Eurasian Affairs?

The two-year Master of Arts program at the Centre for European, Russian, and Eurasian Studies gives students the opportunity to do specialized advanced graduate course work drawing on more than fifteen departments, centres, and institutes across the University of Toronto.

MA students in European and Russian Affairs:

- study at Canada's leading research university
- work with outstanding faculty in a wide range of disciplines with a research specialization on Europe, Russia, and Eurasia
- enrich themselves via academic programs of the Centre for European, Russian, and Eurasian Studies and the Munk School of Global Affairs, including specialized graduate workshops and courses offered by visiting professors
- participate in internships, exchanges, summer study programs, and research experience in the region
- access one of North America's largest research libraries
- benefit from a strong and vibrant learning community with individualized academic and financial support
- assume leadership roles in graduate student conferences, blogs, and journal

The MA is a six full-credit program with a required regional research/study abroad component completed over two years of full time study.

Graduates of the University of Toronto's Master of Arts program in European and Russian Affairs go on to positions in international civil service, government service, private sector organizations dealing with the region, and non-governmental organizations. The rigorous academic program also prepares students for top PhD programs.
